TWO UNITED AIRLINES PILOTS HELD ON ALCOHOL CHARGE IN SCOTLAND

1 Two United Airlines pilots were arrested on suspicion of being under the influence of alcohol in Scotland on Saturday as they were about to fly to the United States, police and the airline said. Police Scotland said the two men, aged 35 and 45, were detained under a section of the Railways and Transport Safety Act which covers carrying out pilot function or activity whilst exceeding the prescribed limit of alcohol. The men are expected to appear in court in Paisley, near Glasgow, on Monday. The flight from Glasgow to Newark Airport, New Jersey, carrying 141 passengers, eventually took off nearly 10 hours late on Saturday evening with a new crew, the airline said. REUTERS

IRAN ARRESTS NUCLEAR NEGOTIATOR SUSPECTED OF SPYING

2 Iran has arrested a member of the negotiating team that reached a landmark nuclear deal with world powers on suspicion of spying, a judiciary spokesman said on Sunday. The suspect was released on bail after a few days in jail but is still under investigation, Gholamhossein Mohseni Ejei said at a weekly news conference, calling the unidentified individual a "spy who had infiltrated the nuclear team," state media reported. The deal that President Hassan Rouhani struck last year has given Iran relief from most international sanctions in return for curbing its nuclear program, but it is opposed by hardliners who see it as a capitulation to the United States. Ejei was responding to a question about an Iranian lawmaker's assertion last week that a member of the negotiation team who had dual nationality had been arrested on espionage charges. REUTERS

MORE BODIES LOCATED BENEATH RUBBLE IN ITALY QUAKE ZONE

3 Rescuers believe they have found more bodies buried deep in the rubble of the ruined town of Amatrice, five days after a devastating earthquake struck central Italy, killing at least 290 people. Residents of the hill town estimated that up to 10 people were still missing and emergency services said they had located three corpses in Amatrice's Hotel Roma, which, like much of the historic center, was wrecked by Wednesday's quake. Deputy Mayor Gianluca Carloni said his uncle's body had still not been recovered from the hotel, which was particularly busy at this time of year because of a food festival. "It is absolutely vital to finish as soon as possible this initial phase to make sure that there are no more bodies under the rubble," he said. REUTERS

A LABOR OF LOVE THIS COMING HOLIDAY

After this scorching summer, it's my weather pleasure to inform you that a gorgeous Canadian air mass will descend upon the entire Northeast just in time for your getaway Labor Day festivities, as yet another summer for the record books across much of the nation turns the page toward the autumn season.

Record heat with unprecedented warmth globally will be the case when the final analysis of this summer is in. The politics of global warming might once again start to "heat up" as the presidential race (aka reality show) spins its finale come this November, with my prediction of record-setting mud-slinging dominating the headlines.

And, yes, with the arrival of cooler air come this Labor Day weekend so will thoughts of football. Patriot fans, I feel for you, as one of the worst decisions in the entire history of the NFL was the suspension of Mr. Football himself, Thomas Edward Patrick "Tom Brady Jr.," for Deflategate, which has really taken the wind/air out of the first four weeks of football in Patriotland.

Anyway, this endless summer will continue through the midweek as temperatures from Philly to NYC still flirt with the 90-degree mark. However, by Thursday the coolest and driest package of air will start to dive into the Northeast with a couple of scattered boomers on Thursday and then — plop, plop, fizz, fizz, oh, what a relief it is — golden sunshine and deep blue skies, combined with very little in the way of humidity, will paint the atmosphere right through your entire holiday weekend.

Keeping an eye on the tropics

Hurricane Gaston, which has been fluctuating between tropical storm status and hurricane status, will make a strong Northeast turn and any land masses will remain out of harm's way.

One disturbance off the Southeast coast could become a bit more organized, but even if it does strengthen some, it will push westward across the Carolinas in the short term as a minor system.

A tropical system near the Bahamas could develop into a tropical storm as it continues to move into the Gulf of Mexico.

Long-range computer models are indicating strong tropical development near the Leeward Islands by late this week.

Here's the local forecast for the upcoming Labor Day weekend:

Boston

Friday: Sunshine, dry, High 75

Saturday: More sun, patchy clouds, High 77

Sunday: Sun, few clouds and warmer, High 79

Labor Day: Sunshine, cooler, High 73

Life in prison after man pleads guilty to murdering his wife

A Waltham man was sentenced to life in prison after pleading guilty last week to the murder of his wife in 2014.

Julio Resto and his wife, Gloria Resto FACEBOOK

A Waltham man was sentenced to life in prison after pleading guilty last week for the murder of his wife in 2014. Julio Resto, 52, appeared in Middlesex Superior Court on Thursday where he pleaded guilty to second degree murder in connection with the Dec. 31, 2014 death of his wife, 42-year-old Gloria Resto of Waltham, according to the district attorney's office. Resto was sentenced to life in prison along with 25 years probation on seven counts of assault with a dangerous weapon.

On Dec. 31, 2014, Waltham police responded to a well-being check at the Resto home around 5 a.m. As officers were en route, Julio Resto walked into the lobby of the Waltham Police Department with a large knife, officials said. After banging the knife against a glass window in the department, he left and walked down the street, still holding the knife. After officers called for him to drop the weapon, he walked toward the officers with the knife and yelled "Shoot me! I have nothing to live for! I just killed my wife!" multiple times, according to a report. "The defendant in this case was angry at the victim who had recently asked him to move out of their shared home following tension in the relationship that had escalated around Christmas Day," said District Attorney Marian Ryan in a statement. "On New Year's Eve, that anger led the defendant to violently attack his wife. The attack cost Gloria Resto her life and left two boys without their mother." Gloria Resto had sustained about 21 stab wounds to the head, neck, torso and extremities, according to the autopsy report.

State police warn Mass. residents about cellphone scam

State police are warning Massachusetts residents about a phone scam in which the caller claims to be an officer.

During the con the caller claims to be an officer from the Internal Revenue Service or "some other agency" and says they are calling to inform the person that an arrest warrant "has been issued under your name," officials said.

The caller then asks for personal or financial information or, if leaving a voicemail, for the recipient to call them back.

The scam is similar to others that officials have seen in the past, police said. The specific number the caller is using is 424-293-7615, authorities said but they warn that it can be any number.

"Please note that this is a complete fraud," state police said online. "No law enforcement agency or any other agency or third-party would call someone to tell them that an arrest warrant has issued, and any administrative contact the IRS would have with a taxpayer would not be conducted in this manner."

Police urge anyone who gets a call similar to this to not give out personal information and to end the call or ignore the message.

Brothers charged in murder of NBA star's Dwyane Wade's cousin

Both were on parole, said Chicago police spokesman Anthony Guglielmi on Twitter.

Derren Sorrells CHICAGO POLICE HANDOUTS

Darwin Sorrells Jr.

Two brothers have been arrested and charged in the shooting death of basketball star Dwyane Wade's cousin in Chicago, police said on Sunday.

Darwin Sorrells Jr., 26, and Derren Sorrells, 22, are facing charges of first-degree murder and attempted murder in the death of Nykea Aldridge, a 32-year-old mother of four, who was hit in crossfire Friday while pushing her baby in a stroller.

Guglielmi described Derren Sorrells as a "documented member" of a Chicago gang called the Gangster Disciples and the older Sorrells as a "co-conspirator" who was "let out early" on a sentence of six years after his conviction on a gun charge from 2013.

It was not clear whether the brothers had a lawyer.

In a city with as many as 90 shootings a week, homicides in Chicago this year are on track to reach their highest since 1997, raising concern about a reversal in the declining rate of serious crime in the country's largest cities in recent years.

Aldridge's death has drawn national attention because of the connection to Wade, a 12-time NBA All-Star who signed a two-year, $47.5 million deal this summer to play for his hometown team, the Chicago Bulls. REUTERS

TEAM TIME

Aside from their obvious strengths and weaknesses as candidates, both Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton need robust organizations to carry them over the finish line. This week, all three of my things to watch in politics are about team, team, team.

1. ALL TOGETHER NOW

A short while ago, when Bernie Sanders was still raging along the campaign trail, it seemed unclear if traditional Democrat power blocs would fully back Hillary Clinton as the nominee. Not anymore. She wrapped up last week with an endorsement from the Teamsters, which is a big signal to organized labor far and wide to get in line no matter how they may feel about her trade deals. Watch for the Dems to tighten their ranks even more this week, with a wide range of surrogates pushing the campaign's talking points ("We love millennials!") and gang tackling any controversies that come her way.

2. WE JUST DISAGREE

It remains shockingly uncertain whether folks on the right side of the aisle are ready to stand with their guy. Even with Donald Trump reorienting some of his more polarizing positions, many rank-and-file Repubs remain noncommittal. Just as it was a week ago: Keep watching for more high-level defections — big GOPers who say they'll back Clinton. Trump's power does not spring from his party's Washington elites, but their open criticisms are not helping. And the polls keep steadily chewing at his hopes for electoral wins not only in battlegrounds, but also in some states that are normally bright red.

3. WHO IS IN THE HOUSE?

Hopes are rising for Democrats, and anxieties are skyrocketing for Republicans over the other races this fall. Put simply: If the GOP holds onto the House and Senate, the party won't care as much who wins the White House. But if the Democrats take over a chamber — or two — and win the Oval Office, it's a whole new world. Watch for a lot — I mean A LOT — more talk about the "down ballot" races in coming weeks.

Drake gifts Rihanna a billboard

Talk about bringing your relationship to new heights.

After news broke that Rihanna would be receiving the Michael Jackson Video Vanguard Award at the VMAs, Drake congratulated the pop singer in the most over-the-top fashion: he bought her a massive billboard.

"Congratulations to Rihanna from Drake and everyone at OVO," the billboard, reads. The gesture didn't go unnoticed by Rihanna — on Friday, the 28-year-old singer posted a photo of the billboard to her Instagram account, with the caption "When he extra !!!" alongside a heart and trophy emoji.

Rumors have been swirling that the pair are secretly dating.

@BADGALRIRI/INSTAGRAM

And although Rihanna insists she's still single, her response to the Canadian rapper's most recent gift definitely adds more fuel to the fire.

We guess Drake really needs to "work" if he wants to win RiRi's heart for good!

Diddy and Cassie are officially back together

It's official: Sean "Diddy" Combs and Cassie are back on. And what better way to celebrate than by throwing a lavish birthday bash?

Last week, TMZ reported that the on-again, off-again couple had called it quits following an argument that brought the cops to Cassie's home. But based on this weekend, it definitely looks like she and the 46-year-old hip-hop artist are back on.

On Friday evening, Diddy threw his singer girlfriend a 30th birthday party that involved a massive cake, tons of social media posts and plenty of celebrity guests.

Just ahead of the celebrations, Diddy posted a video montage of Cassie to his Instagram account, alongside the caption: "HAPPY BIRTHDAY BABY! @cassie I LOVE YOU ALWAYS. GOD BLESS YOU." He also took to Instagram to post his Snapchat story documenting the party, which featured appearances from the likes of Naomi Campbell, French Montana and Quincy Taylor.

Despite the drama that went down last week, the party confirms that the two are still together and very much in love — we guess time (plus an awesome birthday rager) really does heal all wounds.

No, Kendall Jenner did not get banned from Uber

Don't worry, Kendall Jenner won't have to rely on big sis Kim Kardashian to get around anymore.

Earlier this weekend, Kardashian tweeted that Jenner had recently been banned from Uber. "Ugh I have to drive @KendallJenner around tonight bc she's banned from Uber! Why @Uber?!?! She's a "model" passenger!!!!!" she wrote.

As the internet speculated about why the 20-year-old model would be banned from the car service app, the sisters also took to Snapchat to voice their complaints. "OK, Uber, we want to know," Kardashian said in the video, as Jenner is heard chiming in: "Why did you ban me?"

But everyone can rest easy, because an Uber rep spoke with ET on Saturday to get the story straight. "She has not been banned," the source said. "It was a minor account issue that is being resolved. While it is being resolved her account was put on hold. Uber support has reached out."

Kardashian later confirmed that the whole thing was a misunderstanding. "I think Uber reached out to Kendall and fixed the issue!" the 35-year-old personality tweeted.

We wish we had a big sister like Kardashian who could publicly call out Uber in our time of need.

Usain Bolt parties, invites women back to hotel

It's been one week since the closing ceremony of the Rio Olympics, but Usain Bolt is still celebrating.

The nine-time gold medalist was spotted partying in London over the weekend, dancing at a nightclub until 5 a.m for the fourth night in a row. He then invited a group of "up to 10 women back to his hotel to continue the fun," according to People.

Meanwhile, Kasi Bennett, Bolt's girlfriend of three years, doesn't seem too pleased with the sprinter's partying lifestyle. Shortly after the photos of Bolt surfaced, the 26-year old model tweeted the hashtag "#SelfControl" from her Twitter account.

Earlier this week, Bennett also took to social media to like several fan comments alluding to Bolt's unfaithfulness during the Olympic Games. One user's tweet read: "@usainbolt you traded your life with a #goddess @kasi__b for a one night fling with someone who will never even come close. I can't."

We never thought we'd say this about Bolt, but for the sake of his girlfriend, we hope the Olympian decides to slow down and take it easy soon.

How to deal with awkward questions on your first date

LAURIE DAVIS EDWARDS

Single and Swiping

Laurie Davis Edwards is the founder of eFlirt, an online dating concierge service, and the best-selling author of "Love @ First Click: The Ultimate Guide to Online Dating."

When not presented tactfully, "big questions" can be a chemistry killer. ISTOCK

If you're asked "When was your last relationship?" on a first date, you probably want just want to reply with, "Whoa, that is TMI." But there is an art to answering these big questions on first dates.

"Big questions" are different for everyone, but it's usually the one, awkward thing that makes you cringe to answer. For one of my clients, it was a date who asked her, "What would your parents think if you brought me home?" He was asking because he was black, and she wasn't.

Whether you're asked something deep like this, or something more standard — such as, "How is online dating going for you?" — discussing it on a first date can stunt the growth of your developing dynamic and be a chemistry killer. Big questions are always valid for the other person to ask, but it's your first date – you might not even end up liking each other enough to care about the answer.

Refuse to answer the question and you could come off as stone cold. But explain every thought you have and you've suddenly become way too vulnerable on a first date. Here's how to answer any big question you're asked ... without making it a big moment:

Acknowledge that it was a big question

You need to let your date know that they've hit a limit. Starting with something like, "Wow, that's a deep question for a first date!" will discourage them from pushing you on your answer.

Give a broad answer

Be honest and keep it short. It shows an openness to have these big discussions but puts it on a realistic, first-date level. For example, my client who was asked how her parents would handle differing races could have responded, "Oh, they're totally fine with it! They're super-accepting people."

Transition off the topic

Move on by asking your date a (nonawkward) question to move the conversation forward. It's a subtle hint that you're done discussing.

Craig Robinson gets serious

The comedic actor scored an acting award at Sundance for playing a dad in "Morris From America."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Craig Robinson plays a cool dad to a 13-year-old (Markees Christmas) in "Morris From America." A24

Craig Robinson isn't your typical comedic actor who goes serious. In "Morris From America," he plays a father and widower who's dragged his eponymous teen son (Markees Christmas) to Heidelberg, Germany. The movie's about Morris, especially his crush on a slightly older local girl (Linda Keller). But it's also about their unusual father-son-relationship, which is part filial, part friendly. Robinson won a Jury Prize award at Sundance for his turn, which is how the "Office," "Hot Tub Time Machine" and "This is the End" star wound up on "Mr. Robot."

Did you have your feelers out for something more on the drama side before this showed up?

I knew I had ambition, but there was no going after it. It was organic. It was challenging because it had a "Can you pull this off?" effect to it. But I also like this character. I liked his music; I liked the way he talked to his son. I'd never seen anything like their relationship, which toed the line between friendship and fatherhood. I liked the way he talked, period. His vernacular fit my rhythm.

You're sharing a movie with a young teen. How have your experiences acting with kids been?

It's funny: Kids are so prepared. When I had my TV show, "Mr. Robinson," there were kids on the show. When we auditioned them, it was amazing. Every kid that came in, it was like, "Who do we choose?" It would be the adults who came in and were like, "I just got this yesterday!" There was always something. I enjoy working with kids, when they get a little older. I did act with a 6-year-old once, and he was like, "I don't feel like it!" "OK, see all these people here? We're waiting on you." But 10 and up, they're great.

GETTY IMAGES

Social media and gadgets might not have destroyed them. It might make them more focused, more performative.

Pokemon Go, man! I mean, I don't even know why I said that. [Laughs] That's something I'll never, ever try. I'll never even attempt that. It's one thing to sit and play Centipede or Pac-Man. But now they're going in the streets.

How is your German?

I just did the lines I had. It was funny, because I was playing a soccer coach, so they had me on the field. The other coaches are going, "Come on! Get the ball!" I was just yelling my lines, which were [starts clapping], "My wife is dead! Come on! My fingers are too fat to take the ring off!"

"Mr. Robot"

Since this film and the Sundance award you won, have you been getting more and more serious scripts and offers?

"Mr. Robot." I hadn't seen it, so when I got the call I watched it. I was like, "OK, you show me how you're going to fit me in there. We'll see." It was so secretive. They didn't even tell me what my role was. They gave me a description of my character, but I didn't find out what the role was till later.

How have you adjusted to doing that kind of show?

It's a learning experience. It's different than on a comedy set. I was bringing the comedy in between takes, but it's real over there. I had to be like, "Maybe I shouldn't be out here joking around." They want to keep it intense.

Butch Walker gets back in touch with his rock 'n' roll roots on "Stay Gold." PROVIDED

Butch Walker reveals his secret political fantasy

"They're a secret power couple and just playing everybody."

LINDA LABAN
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Butch Walker's newly released eighth album, "Stay Gold," quickly follows up 2015's folksy, introspective "Afraid of Ghosts," which was influenced by the passing of his father.

For this album though, the musician/producer, who splits his time between Los Angeles and Nashville, is ready to rock. Besides making his own music, Walker's written songs for the likes of Taylor Swift, Katy Perry and Pink, and produced for Brian Fallon, Fall Out Boy and Frank Turner. As Walker tells us during band rehearsals in Nashville, "I love my job."

What was the main inspiration behind "Stay Gold"?

I was coming out of this more emotional time with the previous record: my dad had passed and a close friend, too. That was a sad record — beautiful, I love it. It was like therapy for me. I had been worried I wouldn't ever write again after that record. I had spilled my guts. It was a dark record and I worried I had nothing left.

Thankfully that wasn't the case.

Yes, this record is about celebrating, sometimes celebrating vicariously through characters. A lot of it is about the small Bible-thumping conservative town I grew up in. But it's more about falling in love and getting out and wanting more than the small town, small-mindedness where everything is black and white. There's this thing where people never see eye-to-eye and it's all to do with a f—d up ego.

Speaking of which, the video for "Ludlow Expectations" is a GIF featuring Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump flirting.

That's my secret fantasy. They're a secret power couple and just playing everybody. Don't get me started on politics. But I enjoyed taking the piss with that.

How did you come to write "Descending" with Ashley Monroe?

Ashley and I have been buddies for ages. She was flying into L.A. and we were talking on the phone about relationships and how it's a constant struggle to keep love going. She just said, 'We're descending,' and I was like, 'What, your marriage or the plane?' And she said, 'The plane!' We got together after she landed and within five minutes we had the song.

You've written many songs for other people. How do you know when a song is best for you or someone else?

It's a case-by-case basis. But when an idea comes you don't think this would be great for so-and-so. All you think about is finishing it and finishing the thought and the melody before you lose it. Having said that, if it's about my dead dad or my fifth-grade girlfriend it's personal and not for someone else. That would be kind of weird.

For ride-sharing industry, it's all open road

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Increasing competition means more jobs.

Chinese powerhouse Didi Chuxing's acquisition of Uber Technologies Inc's China operations marks the latest big move in an industry that many investors and Silicon Valley pundits view as a winner-take-all game.

According to economists, the car-sharing industry currently dominated by Uber or Lyft will be one of perpetual competition in a business with relatively few barriers to entry.

"That one firm wins is a narrow and not accurate way to think about these firms," said David Evans, chairman of the Global Economics Group and co-author of a recent book that included Uber, "Matchmakers: The New Economics of Multisided Platforms."

Ten other economists who have studied ride-hailing agreed that the growing industry, estimated to be a $40 billion market, has room for at least two successful players, and perhaps a few smaller ones.

The industry, they said, has none of the elements that traditionally have enabled single companies to control a sector. If it is the first of its kind, a company can dominate markets that have huge infrastructure costs, such as putting up cell towers or laying pipes; a large workforce of employees with specialized skills; and customers who get locked into a service and have difficulty leaving for competitors.

Ride services, by contrast, are relatively cheap to start, depend on contract labor with no inherent loyalty or specialized skills, and have free apps that can be downloaded in seconds.

"You may not want to try a new social networking site if your friends aren't on it," Evans said. "But you don't care what app your friends use for ride-hailing."

whether on-demand ride services will remain open to new players has vexed startups and investors since Uber started the industry seven years ago.

Companies taking on Uber include Lyft in the United States, Grab in Southeast Asia, Ola in India and newer startups like New York City's Juno. In the United States, in particular, part of Uber's attraction to investors is the chance at grabbing the entire industry.

In a statement, Uber said: "The ride-sharing industry around the world is highly competitive and innovative. That's good for riders."

Uber investor and board member Gurley argued that any competitor would need to pursue a different strategy — perhaps offering more luxury and high-end services — to successfully battle Uber in its strongest markets.

When business magnate Carl Icahn invested $100 million into Lyft in early 2015, he told media outlets he saw "room for two." Chris Sacca, a prominent venture capitalist who invested in Uber, responded, "This is a winner-take-all game," on Bloomberg television.

Lyft has recently explored the possibility of acquisitions by several companies, a source familiar with the discussions said, and reports of a possible sale stimulated talk of whether it could compete with Uber.

Lyft says it can. In the United States, it says it more than tripled its drivers to about 315,000 in the last year. Between October and May it nearly doubled its annual gross revenue to $1.9 billion — although that figure does not reflect the many rider discounts and promotions Lyft offers.

Uber has 1.5 million drivers and projected $26 billion in gross revenue globally this year, based on a 2015 presentation for investors.

Last year, Lyft hit another benchmark: The wait time for a ride is three minutes, on par with Uber, said President and Co-Founder John Zimmer. At three minutes or less, a passenger will almost always complete the ride.

"You need a certain level of scale to get to three minutes," Zimmer said, referring to the number of drivers and passengers. "Once you reach that, if someone else has more scale, it doesn't matter."

New York-based Juno has brought on 12,000 drivers since launching earlier this year and already has hit the three-minute wait time in Manhattan, said Co-founder and CEO Talmon Marco.

"This is a fairly local industry," Marco said. "You can be a hero in New York and you can be zero in California, and it's OK."

In India, Uber and Ola are neck and neck at around 45 percent of the market each after Uber's market share fell and Ola's rose in 2015, according to market research firm 7Park Data.

The challenge for new startups, however, is that leading companies subsidize their drivers and passengers as they prioritize gaining market share over profit. Both Uber and Lyft have spent heavily on driver bonuses and rider discounts and promotional credits. REUTERS

Nadia Lopez and her book, "The Bridge to Brilliance." XPROVIDED

Brilliance in Brooklyn

Principal Nadia Lopez is revolutionizing education, one scholar at a time.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

When Nadia Lopez left the corporate world to join the New York City Teaching Fellows, she didn't anticipate starting a school in one of the city's poorest neighborhoods.

Now a highly regarded educator and the founder and principal of Mott Hall Bridges Academy, a public middle school in Brownsville, Brooklyn, Lopez is widely recognized for her ability to build bridges in education — whether they be between educators and the communities they serve, or across the many divides in our education system.

She chronicles the challenges and rewards of founding Mott Hall in "Bridge to Brilliance: How One Principal in a Tough Community Is Inspiring the World" (out Aug. 30).

When we caught up with Lopez, she was eager to talk about the importance of an education that goes beyond academics.

Even though you grew up in Brooklyn, you came into the Brownsville community as an outsider. How did you earn people's trust?
I guess the best way of saying it is that I was going to be on the ground to do the work, and showing up within the community — even just walking through the housing developments, and greeting people and introducing myself. The residents should be respected and honored. So I did that every single day [during the summer of 2010], walking every block of Brownsville.

You also lead gender-specific summits about issues affecting the community. Why is teaching beyond academics so important to you, and how does it connect to the school's mission?
Prior to opening up the school, I was doing a lot of youth-empowerment summits. Every summer, there's a tragedy that we have to deal with in the community, and I don't want my children to become jaded in terms of feeling like they don't have any value in this world. Also, I don't want them to think that they need to become a threat to law enforcement because they feel like law enforcement is a threat to them.

Your story came to public attention after a chance meeting between one of your students and a Humans of New York photographer. What advice would you give to other educators, many of whom go unrecognized?
I would say: Stay encouraged. You don't get immediate gratification, and it won't necessarily come from the administrators you work with or the children that you serve, but you have to understand you're here to serve a higher purpose, and in doing so, the fruits of your labor come five to 10 years from now.

What's one thing you want people to know about your students?
How brilliant the children of Brownsville are. And that's pretty much the premise of the "Bridge to Brilliance." I firmly believe that if you reaffirm your community, and the children you come in contact with, they will rise to the occasion.

Patriots special teams preview: kicker Gostkowski still NFL's best

The rules may be changing, but the Patriots continue to be an example of the importance of special teams.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

When it comes to special teams, there aren't many if any coaches who put an emphasis on it more than Bill Belichick.

Being strong in all three phases of the game is something Belichick has preached from Day 1, and watching the Patriots over the years it's easy to see that translate over to the field, where the Patriots have consistently had a top special teams unit.

And we're not just talking about field goals and punts, but all the little things that go into make those successful.

The NFL, however, is essentially trying to eliminate the kickoff. Five years ago the kickoff was moved from the 30-yard line to the 35-yard line, which has since cut kick return plays from 80.1-percent to 41.1-percent, according to NFL.com.

And a new rule set over the offseason rewards the return team an extra five yards for a touchback, placing it at the 25-yard line.

That's nice, but there's one problem with that rule: The kicking team has less incentive to kick the football into the end zone.

It will be interesting to see how the Patriots and Stephen Gostkowski handle the new rule, but there's a good chance the NFL may have actually increased kick returns with this rule, making special teams all the more important.

Locks: Stephen Gostkowski, Ryan Allen, Joe Cardona, Matthew Slater, Brandon King, Nate Ebner

Gostkowski's 2015 season ended on a very sour note with his missed PAT in the first quarter of the AFC Championship Game. It snapped a steak of 523 straight made extra points, and came back to bite the Patriots in the fourth quarter when they were forced to go for a two-point conversion to tie the game … and couldn't convert.

But that doesn't change the fact that Gostkowski is arguably the best kicker in the game and as previously noted takes on an even bigger role with the new kickoff rule.

The Patriots should certainly be more inclined to force the opponent to run the ball out of the end zone. Last year they held opponents to just 18.1 yards per return, the second-lowest amount in the NFL behind the Bills.

A huge reason for this success is the special teams play of Slater, King and Ebner. Slater is officially listed as a wide receiver on the team's roster, but he's really their special teams ace. Having been named a first-team All Pro three times and the Pro Bowl five times, it's easy to see why.

Ebner, the U.S. Olympian, is built for kick coverage and has really come into his own as an NFL player on the special teams unit. King burst onto the scene as an undrafted free agent last year. He was activated from the team's practice squad before Week 4, and stayed on the 53-man roster the rest of the season as a very effective gunner opposite Slater.

For returners, Julian Edelman, Cyrus Jones, Danny Amendola, Keshawn Martin, and Slater could all see time. Look for Jones, the Patriots' first pick in this year's NFL draft, to get a lot of opportunities. He showcased his ability in last Friday's win over the Panthers with a 60-yard punt return.

The Patriots have no shortage of talented kick and punt return options on the roster. GETTY IMAGES

FANTASY: HIGH ON SHARPE, WHITE, DOWN ON LEWIS

FANTASY SPORTS

ADAM LEVITAN
alevitan@metro.us

The best NFL coaches are constantly making adjustments based on their opponent, personnel and injuries. Fantasy owners need to be doing the same thing. The rankings we worked so hard on two months ago remain a fine baseline. But we need to be flexible and react quickly to the constant flow of NFL news. Here are three guys whose value has changed the most:

Sharpe play

It's extremely rare for fifth-round rookie wide receivers to have any impact at all in Year 1. But Tajae Sharpe is on track toward outlier status. He's been running with the starters since minicamps and has continued to operate as the Titans' best receiver in training camp. With Dorial Green-Beckham gone, there's no longer a question about his first-string status. Sharpe was in on 17 of Marcus Mariota's 21 snaps in the second preseason game, catching six passes during that time. He's now a legit threat to battle Delanie Walker and Rishard Matthews for the team lead in targets.

White is the new Dion

Dion Lewis' complications off his ACL tear have thrown the door wide open for James White. With Lewis sidelined indefinitely, White is the heavy favorite to be the Patriots' passing-down back. That role has produced serious value for much of the Tom Brady era, from Kevin Faulk to Danny Woodhead to Shane Vereen to Lewis. In the final seven games of last season (while Lewis was out), White averaged 5.0 catches per game and scored three touchdowns. He's now a viable mid-round pick in full-PPR formats.

Whole lot of Luck

Vontae Davis has been one of the most dominant shadow corners in the NFL over the last few seasons, suffocating receivers on a weekly basis and forcing quarterbacks to look elsewhere. So his recent serious ankle injury is a devastating blow to a Colts defense that now arguably has the least talent in the league. It will be open season for opponents, starting with Matthew Stafford, Golden Tate and Marvin Jones in Week 1. Davis' injury also puts more on the shoulders of Andrew Luck, who has a 33-year-old starting running back and no defensive support. Luck is the favorite to lead the entire NFL in pass attempts this season.

NFL sleepers of the week

1. Jared Cook, TE, Packers
Cook is healthy off foot surgery and the Packers are struggling to find a viable No. 3 receiver. Always long on talent, now Cook is also long at quarterback.

2. Will Fuller, WR, Texans
Locked into an every-down role and will see tons of single coverage opposite DeAndre Hopkins.

3. Mohamed Sanu, WR, Falcons
Harry Douglas and Roddy White have succeeded as the No. 2 wideout for Matt Ryan. Sanu and his new $32.5M contract have a great chance do the same at a low cost.
